There are few if any works of literature or animation that better capture the innocence and wisdom of the child and the child's perspective on life than the A. A. Milne classic "Winnie the Pooh". There were few if any books or films that influenced Thom as a young boy more than these stories detailing the adventures of Christopher Robin and his delightful menagerie of friends as they all adventured in the Hundred Acre Wood. In 1966 when Disney Studios began releasing their featurettes chronicling these wondrous tales, Thom could not have been more excited. His childhood fancies were coming to life. It is in honor of that time in his life we at the Thomas Kinkade Studios proudly introduce scenes from this magical story of love, faith, friendship and adventure. It is in these paintings we hope our collectors reflect on and always remember these undeniable truths from Pooh himself, such as "nobody can be uncheered with a balloon" or "when you see someone putting on his Big Boots, you can be pretty sure that an adventure is going to happen."

Key Points

- Winnie the Pooh I & II are released together in a set of two images and are the first images to feature Winnie the Pooh.
- It was back in 1966 when Disney Studios began releasing their featurettes chronicling these wondrous tales.
- As a young boy, Thom was heavily influenced by the stories of Christopher Robin and his friends and their adventures in the Hundred Acre Wood.
- These two images honor that adventurous time in the young artist's life.
